Hello. Our search for exceptionally intelligent individuals continues.

There are two clues hidden in this image.

Find them, and they will lead you on the road to finding us. We look forward to meeting the few that will make it all the way through.

Good luck.

complete retardation to base your idea of a level of "intelligence" upon a shittfuck picture.. get real, intelligence is awareness - as long as you're fishing for fuckers who still eat starches and acid foods and abide by some form of fear based creed. you wont find shit here - take it from me, i am the I AM of my reality, i experienced the birth of the universe. i did it. theres nothing of "intelligence" simply of perception... you can make ANYBODY super intelligent... and i found out how.. but can you maintain the nutrient intake to cover for the processing? people seem to think intelligence =/= ur nutrition? yeah gl using ur intelligence when ur running low on proper fuel.

What is the Cicada team?

Anonymous Thu 28 Nov 2013 00:51:49 No.13767475   Report

Quoted By: >>13767494 >>13767503

Cicada is an organization is that is attempting to literally genetically engineer culture via computation.

Let me explain what that means.

There is a belief that the mechanisms of natural selection also apply to culture and ideas; the data itself encounters the exact same processes, just the format is different. You may have heard of the proposed unit of cultural selection: a "meme," the informational analogue of "gene." Both genes and memes are selected, mutated, and reproduced.

The goal is to develop a computational technology of memetics that improves itself recursively by applying memetics to memetics. You can judge how well this program has been effective by looking at the word "meme" itself, which is not only self-describing (Autological) but self-fulfilling; "meme" has become an internet meme. With the evolutionary system of culture optimized, unfit ideas would be selected out, and a rich diversity of new ideas mutated. the internet itself is the mechanism for all of this. The end result is supposed to look like a world-wide enlightenment as pathological memes (thought-viruses) are systematically eliminated. Previously huge problems begin to become solved easily because extremely good solutions to them quickly evolve.

The computation part of the program is accomplished by being stupid and having people do everything; it's literally a glorified work scheduling program (this seems mundane, until you begin to think about what work scheduling is.) It collects data, analyzes, and tags data taken from environments demonstrated to be skilled in making selections between data-sets, feeds the data to environments demonstrated to permutate them effectively, and finally feeds them to replicaters who feed them "into the wild" so that unaugmented cultural evolution can do the rest.

Anonymous Thu 28 Nov 2013 00:53:07 No.13767482   Report

Human beings are natural memetic engineers; everyone selects, mutates, and reproduces ideas, but not with equal efficacy. A small number of people are responsible for most of the real evolutionary change. If you represented cultural evolution as a branching bush of ideas, supernodes would be directly responsible for the splits in large branches. This alternate reality game is a selective mechanism designed not to find people merely with crypographical knowledge, but who are innate memetic engineers.

I was thinking more about the "in this image" part. That implies there are clues elsewhere in the message.
Please observe the posting time and date - people were somewhat right in expecting it to be in January.
Hence, the sudden break with [perceived] schedule might be its own clue.

We can logically deduce that the statement "There are two clues hidden in this image" is false, as the clues found were the bricks on the road only to more clues, with no end in sight. The amount of clues exceeds two, so we can conclude that they are all red herrings.

The only thing this image has accomplished is scheduled a bunch of 4channers to work on cryptography skills. It's a breeder image, designed to get people to think, in this case laterally.

Looking into that right now. There's over 3000+ species, but something has managed to catch my eyes.

It might not necessarily be of any significance, but cicadas were used as a symbol of rebirth by the Chinese, and also as a "life giving principle," among other things.

Because, I mean, c'mon. There has to be some sort of meaning or significance behind choosing a cicada instead of, say, a lynx.

And the fact that they were considered symbols of rebirth only makes it more interesting.

Well, as to what the cicada could represent, I did some thinking and while some of it may have no correlation to Cicada, it's still interesting.

1. As we know, cicadas live 13-17 years.

2. There's the concept of cicadas living underground for most of their lives, that could serve as some sort of metaphor.

3. There's also the whole thing with cicadas molting from their nymph skins into adults

4. Cicadas make the loudest sounds of all insects of up to 120 dB, capable of disabling a human's hearing if calling right outside of the person's ear.

5. About 220 species of cicada in Australia, which is also where the binary wall and such is found.

6. The cicada is known to represent "insouciance", in other words, nonchalance or carelessness.

7. One of Aesop's fables has a cicada singing in the summer while the nts work hard and put away food, then that cicada finds itself without food in the winter. Jean de la Fontaine wrote a collection of fables and wrote one based off of this tale. A couple of people were talking about how "ousvxjn14" is pronounced and mentioned the name "Jean" being in it, so I thought it was funny.

7. In Japan the cicada is seen as a symbol of reincarnation.

Also, seven is a prime number. 2spooky the ELI5 would be applying the scientific method to the creative process in the most general sense, on any scale. Cicada is trying to make a physical science of creativity. The method used to do this is genetic analogue, which allows things to be defined with enough precision that it can be computed. On the organizational level it manifests as different teams with the work of each designed to mirror evolutionary processes such as inheritance, mutation, selection, and crossover. On the information level, with computers, it explicitly uses evolutionary processes on culture in a highly targeted and efficacious manner to induce cultural change. It figures out which combination of ideas is best for a particular place and time, places them there, and keeps track to see how they naturally change or die off. When you see a post on the internet that is of particularly outstanding and informative quality with a novel arrangement of concepts in the near-recent, there's a good chance that it's actually a seeded meme from this process put into intelligible format by a dedicated specialist from the output of a computer. The superficial output of this process is a lot of great ideas put in the right places at the right time to create the most cultural change.

Ex Optus employee here (that is the Optus complex at Macquarie pPark). Those buildings went up in 2002, and the ones and zero's were meant to be all techno-arty homages to the fact a telco was moving in. We actually spent about a week at the time taking photo's and trying to decipher what they said, best as we could tell (we being a bunker full of GSM engineers) it was gibberish.

Hope it helps.

I remember seeing those fucking "solve this puzzle" links all over /b/, and I ignored them because I was going through a turbulent time in my life (sort of recovering from that just now - crawled out of my instar phase) and had to ignore these puzzles while I focused on not letting my life fall apart.

I'm so pissed. I'm not saying I would have single-handedly solved this shit, but God damn, I would have had fun! How exciting to have been finding these clues at the same time as other Anons! This is (half of) the kind of shit I live for!

This picture has some stuff along the sides. I'm too poor to own photoshop, anyone want to investigate?

So going back to this one. It's really hard to make out the binary, because of the tree truncating the end of the wall. Line 7 is 61417, which is a prime number.

Autrailia's country code is 61
417 is like an area code I think, there are a few related phone numbers in the area.

The best I can come up with is (011) to dial out of the US +61417 (226783) From line 5 of the wall, also prime.

This leads to a recording saying that we should leave a ten second message, that will be text forward.

Thoughts?

optus has nothing to do with it.
the http://100000001 thingy was coincidence. it resolves to a ip address in a huge block owned by optus, a network/phone company in australia.
1000000001 can't be registered or something, but browsers resolve it to 59.154.202.1 by design.

No since it's divisible by 3 too (instead of just 9 and 1). 9 is a composite number.

However, it certainly is an odd number.

Not sure about any of the other numbers you've listed, but #1, #3, #6, #8, and #9 are most definitely not prime numbers. That's for sure.

I'm not sure about #2, #4, #5, & #7 though.

So the binary to decimal prime number scheme linking to a phone number is completely coincidental?

This was the first Cicada post, if I am not mistaken.

I used FotoForensics to analyze this photo. It looks to have been digitally altered.

Also, the pixels per X and Y unit are 3779, a prime number.

Found another song from 3301? Simon Sat 30 Nov 2013 02:36:44 No.13773233,1 💬

Just got into the Cicada today, never knew what it was before. But I was intruged by the song. Has anyone analyzed the second song from their last.fm page, called Flight and Fight? I can't seem to play it.
